The Usual Report

PINE BLUFF — Pine Bluff's chance of winning the 1939 Arkansas football champion were lessened with the announcement by Coach Allan Dunaway that Raymond Hutson, Zebra quick-kick expert will be unable to play against the Hope Bobcats here Tuesday.

Dunaway said that a leg injury which kept Hutson out of the Zebra-Georgia Military Academy game last week probably will eliminate him for the remainder of the season.

Raymond, twin brother of Robert Hutson, has kept the ball deep in enemy territory during the entire 1939 season with his punts. He suffered a badly bruised leg in the Little Rock game.

"Raymond's inactivity will leave us powerless as far as punting is concerned," Dunaway said. "We haven't got a man on the squad capable of handling punting as he has."

Dunaway found little joy in his preparations for the Hope game. Virgil Meroney, first string fullback, suffered a broken collarbone in the Georgia game last week and will not play football again. Buck Forsythe, reserve end, slipped in the shower in Atlanta, and cut his foot, and "Fuzzy" Watts, reserve guard, who has been out of the last several games because of a serious leg injury, also will be on the sidelines.

STUTTGART — Coach Allen Dunaway of Pine Bluff said Tuesday that "keeping one's head" and putting forth the best effort by every player were important factors in winning football games. He was a guest of the Rotary Club. The Stuttgart High School football team and coaches attended the meeting.

Business Picks Up During November

St. Louis Reserve Report Optimistic for October, November

ST. LOUIS—(AP)—The European war may have provided the initial stimulus, but the Federal Reserve Bank Wednesday credited increased domestic business with sustaining the expansion of trade and industry in the Eighth district.

"Orders directly traceable to the war have been of les importance in the expansion in this district than has the increase in domestic demand," the bank said in its monthly report.

Business continued generally to improve through October and the first half of November, but the upswing was less pronounced than in September immediately following start of the war.

The onlyq noticeable slowing-down or leveling-off was in new-orders for merchandise, the bank reported. However, many manufacturers have enough orders on hand to insure present operations for the remainder of the year and, in some cases, well into 1940.

The generally higher rate of activities in manufacturing plants, at mines and elsewhere has resulted in a marked improvement in the employment situation, the bank asserted.

Retail distribution continued to increase at a somewhat better than seasonal rate. Volume of retail trade in October, as measured by sales of department stores in principal cities, was 2.9 per cent above September and 5.2 above October a year ago.

NOLAN (TOOTSIE) CARGILE

Former Hope Player Carries Tulsa Hopes Against Porkers

Nolan (Tootsie) Cargile Is Principal Threat of Tulsa in Thanksgiving Day Battle With Arkansas Razorbacks

TULSA — After his showing last Saturday against Drake university, Nolan Cargile, the "white-haired boy" from Hope, Ark. will be the principal hope of the University of Tulsa Thursday when the Hurricane meets the Arkansas Porkers here in the southwest's Thanksgiving day grid classic.

Cargile shook off the blanket under which he has been hiding the talents which earned him all-state honors while playing for the Hope High school eleven in 1935 and, later, while helping the Oklahoma Military academy pile up a total of 19 straight victories. And when he burst into the spotlight, he did it dramatically by carrying the ball over Drake's goal line for the Hurricane's two touchdowns.

Following his graduation from O. M. A. Nolan matriculated to Tulsa where he was immediately eligible for competition. But until Saturday he was unable to generate the spark which distinguishes a sensational ball carrier from just another halfback. Head Coach Chet Benefiel sen Cargile in to replace Herbie Collins, senior tailback also from Arkansas, and three plays later Sophmore Happy Miles completed a pass to the Hope hopeful who pranced over for the counter. The second touchdown, which gave Tulsa its first victory in five starts, resulted from an identical pass from Miles, followed by a five-yard spurt by Cargile across the pay-off line.

Knowing that the Porkers will be salty after their victory over Southern Methodist, Coach Benefiel plans to fight fire with fire by playing Razorbacks against Razorbacks. Game captains for the Thanksgiving tilt will be Collins and Othel Turner, senior right tackle, both from Fayetteville. L. D. Moore, another sophmore who came to Tulsa from Springdale, Ark., probably will start at fullback. Although Cargile can play right halfback, it is likely that he will alternate with Collins at tailback.

The game will be called at 2 p. m. and athletic officials have announced that good tickets will be available at stadium gates for those who have not made reservations by mail.

Hopes for Peace With Russia Are Believed Better

Russia, However, Expected to Insist On Finnish Territory

GERMAN VIEWPOINT

Britain to Begin Total Blockade of Germany Starting Monday

MOSCOW, Russia—(AP)—Hopes for a peaceful settlement of the Russian-Finnish dispute increased Wednesday with the receipt of reports that Finnish troops had been ordered withdrawn from the Russian border.

It was hoped that the issue could be settled by negotiations, one unofficial but well-informed Soviet source said, although Russia is already so far commited to acquisition of of Finnish territory on the isthmus of Karelia, opposite Leningrad, that she is expected to insist on getting it.

U. S. Would Aid

This source added that Russia doesn't want war.

Reports of Finnish troop withdrawals came after the soviet government had reported fresh border clashes in which the Red army was said to have repulsed with machine guns the Finnish troops attempting to cross the frontier.

Germany Sides With Reds

BERLIN, Germany — (AP) — German sympathies are on Russia's side in the dispute with Finland, but officially Germany is neutral and disinterested, informed sources said Wednesday.

The German view is that Russia has unquestionable right to access to the Baltic sea, but that Finland is so placed strategetically that she could prevent this access.

Hence it is held that Finland should yield the strategic islands.

Informed quarters, insisting that they were not speaking for the government, said Russia had been dealt with unfairly at the end of the World war, as was Germany.

They said a wrong was done to Russia in "bottling her up" without an unhampered outlet to the Baltic and admitted this was made possible by Germany's earlier support of Finland against Russia.

Germany now is interested in seeing this wrong righted, it was said.

Another Ship Sunk

LONDON, England—(AP)—The 1,023-ton British Steamer Rubislaw sank off the southeastern coast of England Tuesday after striking a mine, it was announced Wednesday.

Thirteen crewmen were reported killed.

An air battle between British combat planes and a lone German raider over the northeast coast of England Wednesday resulted in bringing down the Nazi plane at sea, the British announcement said.

Cryptic radio instructions from the Admiralty put British warships on the alert Wednesday for the scheduled start of a new total blockade against Germany next Monday.

Simpler Homes and Lower Building Costs

Low-income families who are getting a little tired of folding beds and supboard kitchens can take heart from the fact that the average home built during the first six months of 1939 cost less than did the average home built during the preceding three years. This does not mean building costs were down, but rather that people were building less elaborate houses.

According to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the average cost between January and July of this year was $3611; in 1936 the average was $4044. These figures represent the bare cost of thebuilding. They do not include land, land improvements, profits and commissions, which will bring the cost to the purchaser to something better than $5000.

This figure is still too high. The Home Loan Bank Board says it's too high, and I. N. Tate, vice president of the Weyerhaeuser Sales Company, St. Paul, Minn., agrees with the board. Mr. Tate declares that about 75 per cent of all the homes being built retail for more than $5000—and only 25 per cent of the wage-earners in the country can afford to buy a home at this price.

The U. S. attorney general's office is currently investigating high building costs. It is possible that this campaign will result in price moderations. But even if every abuse is eliminated, the result will not be the complete answer to the building enigma—it will be merely a step toward bringing prices within the $2000-$4000 range, which most workers can afford.

The rest of the problems will have to be solved by the people who build houses and the people who live inthem. The basic prices of materials will not be reduced very much; and the price of labor can scarcely be expected to decline. But if the home owner were willing to live in the kind of house his income can stand instead of feeling that he must have a house better than the Joneses', next door and the Smiths', across the street, he would be much better off.

The four Hoess brothers in Hammond, Ind., tried out that idea, and it worked. The brothers had a lot of idle land on their hands, so they cut it up into acre lots and built identical houses. Each house sold for $2600—complete with the land. The purchaser had to make some of the improvements, but he had his home.

This is the answer that the construction conferees in Washington suggested. Some builders were optimistic enough to predict that the cost of homes will be reduced by 50 per cent if buyers aren't too fussy about having something "different" and if they don't ask for too many frills in the design.

It's pretty well established that mass production cuts down costs. Each house will cost less and can be more quickly erected if the builder can use the same pattern throughout his project.

Perhaps if potential home owners get together with builders they will be able to afford to buy homes—and still have enough money left over to eat regularly.

Pneumonia and Influenza Cause Ten Per Cent of All Deaths in U. S.

(This is the fourth in a series of 14 articles by Dr. Fishbein on the nine principal causes of death in the United States.)

Rated after heart disease among the chief causes of death in the United States are ininfluenza and pneumonia. They are grouped together because they frequently strike at the same time, or because one often follows the other.

In 1937, influenza and pneumonia accounted for 148,041 deaths, or 10.02 per cent of all deaths in this country. They caused 12.6 per cent of all deaths among persons between the ages of 5 and 19 and were third among the causes of death in this age group. Nevertheless, except for the great epidemic of 1918, the number of deaths from influenza and pneumonia has been gradually declining. Now there is reason to believe that with the discovery of anti-pneumonia serums and sulfapridine as effective agents, the rates will fall still lower.

Influenza alone is seldom fatal. In fact, for a while, all deaths from both diseases were chalked up to pneumonia. Then came the epidemic of 1918, and we learned of the special nature of influenza under some circumstances. In that epidemic, many patients died of pneumonia, but the chief cause of death was influenza which induced pneumonia.

Since scientists are convinced we are likely to have further epidemics of influenza from time to time, we should give some attention to methods of preventing such conditions. In the first place, remember these diseases are of the infectious type. One of the first preventative measures is to stay away from persons who are victims of these diseases.

Remember, too, that the germs are spread by coughing or sneezing The person who is sick should not use the same towels, napkins, drinking and eating utensils that are used by the rest of the family. Certainly they should refrain from kissing or fondling children.

We do not have any established form of vaccination or inoculation against influenza and pneumoia. Prevention, therefore, meas that we must keep our bodies in the best physical condition so they can resist these diseases by the development of the kind of natural resistance the body has against all sorts of physical dsturbances.

Neglect of mild influenza or of a mild cold leads to pneumonia. The first thing to do when you are sick is to get into bed and call a doctor.

NEXT: Modern treatment of pneumonia.

Kinnick, Back of Year, Heads NEA All-America

By HARRY GRAYSON
NEA Service Sprots Editor

The All-America of 1939 . . .stalwarts who stood up under the most exacting tests of collegiate football.

The 11 players composing the NEA Service All-America team, chosen with the aid and advice of coachs, scouts and sports writers throughout the land measures up to the highest standard that can be asked in a game.

An athlete cannot have a single bad day and be an All-America.

This demand is qualified too inasmuch as a good day cannot be measured accurately in terms of statistics and touchdowns. The All-America may be cast with an undermanned squad. His club may even lose a game or two. Victory is not the principal test of greatness. All-America honors frequently are won by gridiron gladiators who stand out under adverse circumstances.

The All-America man is always a competitor. In the line, he is the player who sticks out like a sore thumb while getting his bumps. In the backfield, he is the one who does not quit when the blockers are through.

Of such players is built the NEA All-America team of 1939.

Of such stuff is built the smashing ends, Esco Sarkkinen of Ohio State and William (Bud) Kerr of Notre Dame; the towering tackles, Nicholas Drahos of Cornell and Harley McCollum of Tulane; the fighting guards Edward Molinski of Tennessee and Harry Smith of Southern California thethe perfect center, John Schiechl of Santa Clara, and the backs, Paul Christman of Missouri, Banks McFadden of Clemson, the great Nile Clarke Kinnick of Iowa and Big John Kimbrough of Texas A. and M.

The 1939 NEA All-America is headed by Nile Kinnick of Iowa, the player of the year.

Standing no more than 5 feet 8 and weighing only 170 pounds, this compactly constructed 21-year-old halfback was rugged enough to play 360 consecutive minutes against Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Purdue, Notre Dame and Minnesota.

Kinnick of Iowa Natural Athlete

Kinnick is a natural athlete. He now registers from Omaha, but was Bob Feller's battery mate while living at Adel, Ia. He was a superlative guard in basketball, but gave up the indoor pastime to study.

With all his amazing athletic ability, Kinnick, a senior, is a Phi Bet-Kappa candidate with 3.5 grade-point average 4 is perfect.)

With hand and foot, Kinnick figures in 107 of the 123 points Iowa had going into its final with Northwestern.

He ran and blocked well from either halfback position . . called signals part of the time. He punted 59 times for an average of 40.2 which included several out-of-bounds within the 10-yard line. Protecting Iowa's 7-6 lead against Notre Dame with two minutes to go he stood on his 22-yard line and punted 72 yards under pressure to clinch the game.

The boy with the small, sharp face and sparkling blue eyes averaged 19 yards in returning punts and kick-offs.

He dropkicked 11 points after touchdown in 17 attempts . . .is believed to have led the nation in dropkicks after touchdown.

Banks McFadden Was Too Fragile in High School

Banks McFadden, Clemson's lanky back, was too skinny and fragile to play football at Great Falls, S. C. High School, so he carried water.

Today McFadden stands 6 feet 3 and weighs 183 pounds.

This senior had blazing speed, probably the finest punter in the country. He was at his best when the chips were down . . . when the band was blaring.

He received prominent All-America mention as a basketball forward last winter . . .throws discuss. and broad jumps.

Paul Christman of Missouri considers football a grand game but prefers baseball for a career. A brother of Mark Christman, the St. Louis Browns' third baseman, Paul is a first baseman and long-distance hitter sought by several major league clubs.

Christman is 21 years old, stands 6 feet 1. His weight varies between 189 and 195.

He is a level-headd field general, one of the finest passers of all time, a hard runner both through the line and in the open, a remarkable ball-handler, an average punter and far from a green hand on defense.

Christman was unjustly criticized following Missouri's winning effort against the Sooners. Without him, Old Mizzou would have had a tough time getting a ball-carrier to the line of scrimmage. He was chiefly responsible for Missouri's Big Six championship.

Kimbrough Injures His Own Teammates

In high school, John Kimbrough, Texas A. & M. fullback, acquired the reputation of injuring teammates, so hard did he smack the line. He still has it.

Kimbrough, standing 6 feet 2 and weighing 205 pounds, was the workhorse of the Southwest Conference. He has his own peculiar style of running . . . a straight ahead jarring knee action.

Blind Esco Sarkkinen, Ohio State end, is 6 feet tall and weighs 192 pounds. He is a handsome Finnish lad of 21 and wants to coach. He is a slick pass receiver and blocker but is noted chiefly for defensive ability. He is a tough fellow to take out. More than one attempted to block him out on a play with no success. He is a keen diagnostician of plays and a deadly tackler.

Notre Dame's opponnts called William Howard (Bud) Kerr the most accomplished end they tackled all year. Bill Kerr was kept out of the Army game by a kidney ailment incurred in the Carnegie Tech battle.

He was rated the squad's best pass receiver. His greatest thrills was scoring against Carnegie Tech a year ago on an end-around play.

Nicholas Drahos, in his second year at tackle, was consistently the outstanding man on the Cornell team. This resident of Cedarhurst, N. Y., where he prepared at Lawrence High School, is 20 years old, weighs 210 pounds and stands 6 feet 3.

Most of the long runs made by Cornell backs were made through holes opened by Nick Drahos.

In the Ohio State game Walt Scholl startedCornell on its way to victory by running 79 yards off Drahos' tackle.

Seldom was a gain made through Drahos.

Unlike most tackles, Drahos also shares in the scoring.

Going into the Pennsylvania party, he had accounted for 11 points, a field goal and eight points after touchdown via the plac-kicking route. He scored five of Cornell's points against Ohio State.

McCollum Biggest in Tulane History

Harley McCollum is the biggest tackle in Tulane history . . .stands 6 feet 6 weighs, 235 pounds. He is 21. Not a single first down was made through him. As a blocker he cleared gaps through which Green Wave backs romped. He was the outstanding man in an outstanding line.

Edward Molinski, left guard, was top man in a tremendous Tennessee line . . . was given a margin over his running mate, Bob Suffridge, by coaches and critics. An intercollegiate heavyweight boxing champion and registering from Massillon, O., Ed Molinski, who wars spectacles while studying, carried out all assignments letter perfect.

Harry Smith of Southern California repeats as the other guard. Big and fast, Smith leads the interference of Howard Harding Jones Thundering Herd.

Of German extraction, John Schiechl . . . pronounced Sheel . . .is 22 years old, stands 6 feet 2 weighs 210 pounds. Santa Clara's center was a beast on defense. Ball-carriers halted to meet head-on with his crushing bulk. He had few peers on pass defense . . . knocked down and intercepted plenty. He was always downfield to block and often on the end of a lateral.

There may be some criticism of the NEA Service first team because of the absence of George Cafego, Tennessee's brilliant tailback.

But coaches and scouts hesitated to recommend Cafego because he did not play as much as he did a year ago and finally was put out by a knee injury. And when he did play, Cafego did not shine with his 1938 brilliance.

So there you have the All-America team of 1939 . . . men who went all the way all the time.

NEA's 1939 All-America will do until a better one is named.

Thanksgiving

Gone is the time to sow; the time to reap
Is past, Now, from the fields of earth, plow-torn,
And scattred with fine seed through spring-soft days,
Down fall-crisp hours, the harvest has been borne.
The morning of the year and afternoon
Have fled. Now, once again, its twilight comes—
Novembre, gray of skies and trees and ground
Streaked by th torchlights of Chrysanthemums.
Now is the time for men to gather close
In homes where woodsy hearthfires flame and there,
Heeding the year's hushed vesper hour to raise,
From grateful hearts, a glad Thanksgiving prayer
For all the wonder of th Living Love
That, from one grain, lifts fruit of Myriad seeds;
That makes man out of God. God out of man,
And, in frail dreams, sees harvests of strong deeds. —Selected.

Living The Way We Pray

I knelt to pray when the day was done, and prayed 'O Lord, bless every one lift from each saddened heart the pain, and let the sick be well again." and then I woke another day, and carelessly went on my way.

The whole day long I did not try to wipe a tear fro many eye' I did not try to share th load of any brother along the road; I did not go to see the sick man just next door to me.

Yet, once again, when day was done, I prayed, "O Lord, bless everyone," But as I prayed, into my ear there came a voice that whispered clear: "Puse, hypocrite, before you pray—whom have you trid to bless today? "God's sweetest blessings so by Hands that serve Him here below."

And then I hid my face and cried, "Forgive me, God, for I have lied. Let me but live another day, and I will live the way I pray."

Makes All-America But He's Squad's Laziest Man

Harley McCollum, Tulane's All-America tackle candidate, phones for a date, above . . . and gets it. The attractive young lady with him, below, is Co-ed Maylee Kinberger. Harley admits he's lazy but it doesn't prevent him from spending plenty of time on the books.

By JERRY BRONDFIELD
NEA Service Sports Writer

Harley McCollum, biggest tackle in Tulane history, is a native of Oklahoma, where he played high school ball at Broken Arrow (mostly with Indians) and at Wagoner . . Now lives in Stillwell . . . Is 21 years old, stands 6 feet 6 inches, weighs 235 pounds.

Splendid horseman and expert with firearms, the result of sessions with National Guard and Citizens' military Training Camp at Fort Sill . . . Adept in use of rope, trick lassoing stuff, etc.

McCollum loves to hunt and fish Goes on such trips after every home game . . . Often shoves off in motor boat for backwoods swamps in Achafalaya country where he takes pot shots at alligators . . . Green Wave's All-America candidate marvels at the palmettos and cypress trees of Louisiana . . . Trappers, fishermen and moss-gatherers marvel at McCollum's stature.

Frequently dives overboard into eight feet of murky water for oysters . . . Another favorite pastime is shark fishing, but sport he enjoys most is fishing for alligator gars in the freshwater bayous which lead into the Gulf of Mexico.

Very difficult to catch alligator gars on hook and line because long snouts snap cord and sets them free . . McCollum has mastered trick of catching them with piano wire loops.

He tries small knot at end of wire, then passes wire through until he has noose. On noose, at opposite end from knot, he ties fishhead . . Alligator gar bites at fishhead and starts off with it but in so doing passes his snout through noose, and lower jaw gets hooked . . Gars can't be eaten but it's great sport.

Carefree McCollum is known as laziest and sleepingest man on squad . . Soft-spoken and mild-mannered . Has strange habit of laughing through out a game . . . without clowning.

A junior, majoring in physical education, McCollum would prefer to enter medical school if he can gain admittance . . . Doesn't burn up the class room but fact that he has grades of 90 in anatomy and 91 in physiology (two important pre-med courses) indicates real ability in subjects he likes . . . Inseparable chum of Gerald Joseph, interne in New Orleans hospital.

This rousing giant does terrific job on defense . . .Record shows that not one first down has been made through him this year . . . As blocker on offense he clears gaps through which Bobby Kellogg, Buddy Banker and thhe rest of the Green Wave backs romp for plenty of yardage.

"Some of the boys are crippled. some sick and a few of the best players are not likely to be in the line-up, he said. "If we get the breaks we may be able to hold Hope to two touchdowns."

And in the Front Yard He Planted Onions

SAN ANTONIO, Texas—(AP)—Maury Maverick, peppery Mayor of San Antonio and former Texas representative in congress, thinks vegetables are as easy on the eye as most flowers and a great deal more profitable.

He raised a crop of onions, radishes, carrots, collards and string beans in his front yard this summer and then put in a second planting of winter onions.

So far he hasn't convinced Mrs. Maverick that roses aren't prettier.

5 WOULD KILL

BY TOM HORNER

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

CHAPTER XIII

YESTERDAY: Dawson studies the cigarets. Ara comes, tells him that she saw Benthorne earlier in the evening. She came to kill him, but Mrs. Benthorne interrupted their meeting. Dawson asks why she wanted to kill Benthorne. Slowly Ara answers: "He was my father!"

FOR a moment there was silence as Ara's words seemed to echo throughout the room.

The girl did bear a resemblance to Benthorne, Dawson realized now, wondering how it had escaped him. The expression of hate death had frozen on Benthorne's face was reflected, however softened, in her features. There was the same downward slant to the corners of the mouth, the same determined set of the jaw. And Ara's almost unbreakable control, her ruthlessness of purpose—these were Benthorne's heritage to his daughter.

"You have proof, of course?" Dawson asked, explaining, "You may share in the estate."

Ara shook her head. "I don't want his money—ever—" she said bitterly. "He offered me that . . . a hundred thousand to go away and never let Mrs. Benthorne know. I laughed at him . . . I wanted to make him suffer as we had suffered—mother and I. . . ."

"You must have some proof," the detective persisted, gently.

"I've plenty of proof, right here in this room," Ara answered. "Pictures, letters, a marriage certificate. They were on the desk when Mrs. Benthorne came in. He stuffed them into a book, and put it on the shelf quickly, hoping she hadn't seen them. . . . But I told her."

"Suppose you start at the beginning and tell me all about it. We'll get to the proofs later, if necessary." Dawson guided her to a chair, then stood over her, waiting for this unbelievable, fantastic story.

THERE was nothing sordid in Ara's account of her mother's marriage to the man the world was to know as Arnold Benthorne. It was merely the old, old story of an impetuous daughter, an attractive young man, and an elopement to escape parental objection.

"Mother—her name was Ara Johnson, too—" the girl began, "was the daughter of a wealthy Montana cattleman. She was a beautiful girl, and she had a dozen proposals before she was 18. But John Douglas"—Dawson glanced questioningly at the young man, at the mention of the name—"really won her love.

"He was handsome, wealthy, apparently an adventurer when he came to Montana. No one could find out much about him, or where he had made his money—but that didn't bother folks out there much. . . . He did no work, received no mail, and apparently had no interest in life until he met Ara Johnson. . . ."

The old cowman, Boss Johnson, had little liking for the stranger, the girl related, and less when he discovered his daughter was seeing Douglas. At last the couple eloped to Salt Lake City.

The marriage lasted three months. Then Douglas disappeared, leaving his wife penniless and alone. She was too proud to go back to her father, too independent to ask for help. She found work, first as a waitress, then in a laundry, but the hours were long and the pay small.

Ara was born in a charity ward. But the months of work, the agony of loneliness, climaxed by the birth of the child, had taken too great a toll of her mother's strength.

"Before Mother died, she wrote all of this in detail. Then she put it with all of her pictures of herself and her husband, her marriage certificate and some letters John Douglas had written her before their elopement. On one of them—his finger must have been smudged with ink—was an almost perfect fingerprint. She also wrote a letter to her father, in Montana.

"She left instructions that her father should be notified in case of her death and that the packet of letters should be kept for me. But something went wrong, no one ever told her father. And the packet was forgotten.

"I was raised in an orphanage. Apparently no one ever wanted to adopt me. When I was 15 I went to work as a housemaid. The family I worked for were kind and helped me all they could. It was through their efforts that I was able to trace my birth record and discover my mother.

"One of the nurses who had cared for Mother remembered her, and told me about her. She remembered the packet of letters, too, and when she learned I did not have them, she began a search that finally uncovered them in an old file cabinet, in the vault."

BUT finding her father was no simple task, Ara learned after long years of vain searching. She might have gone home to her grandfather, but finding her father became an obsession. She had been alone all of her life, a few more years could not matter.

And as those years passed any affection she might have had for her father turned to hate. Her long hours of work were blamed on him. The pleasures she was forced to forego and the hardships she endured were charged up to his neglect. Hers was a long fight, for an education, for a job, even for a living.

Detesting her father, she refused his name, adopted that of her grandfather. And all the time she waited for the clew that might lead her to her father.

It came unexpectedly.

SHE was working as cashier in a coffee shop when she first noticed him—an open-faced, red-haired, smiling youth, who paused to talk about the weather and the baseball games as he paid his check.

"Build-up for an invitation to show and supper," she warned herself. There were many such requests and invariably all met with the same smiling refusal. But this time, Ara wondered if she really wanted to class this genial young man with all the others.

For a week she watched for him each day, waited for the inevitable "How about seeing a show tonight?" But it did not come. Then late one evening, just before she was ready to quit, she looked up from counting her change into those laughing blue eyes, and that disarming grin.

"Have you lived in Salt Lake long?" he asked pleasantly.

"I was born here."

"You must know a lot of people."

"I'm looking for a man," he continued. "I don't know much about the city. I've searched for a week and I'm no farther now than when I started. You've been friendly—more so than any other person I've met—I wonder if you'd help me?"

There was no denying his straightforward appeal. "Wait outside until I'm through here. We can stop at the library, check into the directories."

Fifteen minutes later they hurried toward the library. Suddenly Ara paused. "This isn't a habit of mine, you know," she said. "But you do look honest, and I may be able to help."

"I know you can," the young man insisted. "May I introduce myself? I am John Douglas."

CHAPTER XIV

Yesterday: Ara tells how a John Douglas married her mother, deserted her before Ara was born. The mother died, leaving Ara letters and photographs which may help her find her father. Ara is brought up in an orphanage, has to struggle to live. She hates her father. At last she meets a likeable young man, discovers his name is John Douglas.

DAWSON was not surprised as Ara related her first meeting with young John Douglas, but the young man's connection with Arnold Benthorne was still mystifying. The detective waited for Ara to continue.

"Let me go on from here, darling," Douglas put in, anxious to spare her as much as possible of the ordeal. But she refused, tenderly but firmly.

"There are some things I've never even told you, John dear," she said, taking his hand and pulling him down to the arm of her chair. "I've never let you know how much I hated my father. You've thought I wanted to find him because I loved him. And perhaps you wondered that I fell so much in love with you, almost immediately. I really didn't. I detested you, because I thought you were related to my father. That's why I ran away that first night."

John laughed at the memory. "You see, Captain Dawson," he explained, "after Ara had promised to help me search for this man, she left me standing there after I had told her my name. I couldn't figure it out. I went back to the coffee shop the next day, though, and explained that I was looking for my uncle, John Douglas."

"And I thought your uncle was my father. I saw a chance to locate him, at last, through you, possibly to hurt him, by hurting you. But I never could have, honey." Her smile revealed the love that had grown out of her hate.

ARA and John could find no trace of any John Douglas in Salt Lake City. Then one day, when they had almost given up hope, John found a picture of Arnold Benthorne in the rotogravure section of a New York newspaper. Benthorne and his wife had been guests at a costume ball, and the financier had gone dressed as a miner.

"Benthorne made only a few mistakes," Douglas said, "but that was one—a fatal one. . . ." Dawson gave no indication that he had noticed the word "fatal"—as the young man continued: "I had one picture of the man I was trailing, an old, faded print. But it showed the man with a beard. Benthorne's picture was astonishingly similar. Then Ara had one of the pictures of her father copied and we sketched a beard on his face. The result was so perfect we were convinced that Benthorne was our man.

"You would have thought that dressing as a miner for a costume party was the last thing that Benthorne would ever have done. I guess he was so confident that the past could never bother him, but he overplayed his hand. Perhaps I'd better explain," he added, noting Dawson's unspoken questions.

"The real John Douglas was 'Big Red,' my uncle, as I've already told you. He was a prospector in the Yukon, went to Alaska in the first gold rush. For years he grubbed along, making a little strike, always looking for that one great mine. Then he disappeared into the unmapped interior.

"For years no one heard of him. The family, my father and the others, lost track of him, believed him dead. That opinion would have remained unchanged if I had not got a job with the Great Northern Mining Company, after graduating from college.

"In going over some data for a survey, I found that a John Douglas had sold a rich claim to the company in Seattle in 1916, long after my uncle had disappeared. I told my father about it and he sent me to Alaska to check on the sale. It took me over a year to search out old miners who had known 'Big Red' personally, and to check 20-year-old records.

"I had one piece of real luck. The old editor of one of the Juneau papers had a photograph of my uncle, taken just after he had filed on the claim which the Great Northern later bought. Pictured with 'Big Red' was a gambler, a bearded fellow named Benson.

"'I never liked this fellow, Benson,' the old editor told me. 'Red and I were good friends and I told him that Benson was a crook. But Red seemed to like him. After Red went back to his claim, this Benson fellow disappeared.'

"I reported the whole thing to my father and we agreed that Benson probably either won or stole uncle's claim. If uncle had sold his claim in Seattle, in 1916, as the records showed, he never would have gone back to Alaska without seeing his family."

FROM there the trail grew faint. A single, slim clew was a brief letter, addressed to "John Douglas, Salt Lake City," in the company files. That was the last communication the company had with Douglas, subsequent efforts to locate him having failed.

On that vague lead, young John Douglas had come to Salt Lake, found Ara. After they discovered Benthorne's picture, they compared all their notes and records, even handwriting, and concluded that Ara's father, the gambler Benson, and Arnold Benthorne were one and the same.

But proving it was another matter. They came to New York and determinedly set about learning all they could about Benthorne.

The financier had refused to see Douglas, but did agree to an interview with Ara after she had mentioned her mother's name, and a few personal matters known only to her mother and father.

IT was the smudged fingerprint on the letter that broke Benthorne's denials, Ara told Dawson. Only when she confronted him with that irrefutable proof did he finally admit that he was her father.

"Then he made all sorts of promises, if I would only go away, never come back. He had no more love for me than for my mother. His only fear was that his social position might be endangered, that a scandal might hurt his business. His one idea was to get rid of me as quickly and as painlessly as possible. . . ."

"You're lucky Benthorne didn't live longer," Dawson said. "He might have 'removed' you permanently. . . . But why, after you had left the house earlier in the evening, did you come back with this silly marriage stuff?"

"That was my idea, Captain," Douglas replied. "I figured if I could get in the house for a few minutes, I might recover Ara's proofs; and I wanted a chance at Benthorne myself. I know he robbed my uncle."

"But Miss Johnson had no further use for those letters and pictures, unless she really intended to try to ruin Benthorne."

"I wanted to do just that, Captain," Ara said. "I intended to wreck everything that Arnold Benthorne had—his marriage, his business, his entire life. He showed no mercy to my mother. . . ."

"So you suggested that Douglas come back for the proofs. . . . Did you tell him about the secret entrance from the street?"

"I didn't know you knew of a secret entrance, Ara," Douglas interrupted. "I did not know you had been here last night. I thought—" Dawson directed his next question at Douglas.

"Did it occur to you, Douglas, that this girl might have wanted to have you discovered in the house . . . to cover up a murder she intended to commit?"

By GEORGE ROSS

NEW YORK — Mayor LaGuardia, who suddenly plunged into the movie whirl, has accepted the invitation of the Film Critics to serve as master of ceremonies at their annual award-giving shindig in the Rainbow Room, Jan. 7. In Ladies and Gentlemen they pass the remark that long-hand writing is a lost art like glass-blowing, and Gilbert Miller's office still is warding off the blows of protests struck by active glass blowers. An enterprising promoter has dug out the old Dempsey-Willard fight pictures for re-release. They once were forbidden by law.

Phil Epstein, the Hollywood scenarist, is telling the story about the two Indians who were debating whether to join the A. F. L. or the C. I. O. One of the Indians grunted: "Me of the Indians grunted: "Me no like A. F. L. Too many 'ums—maximum, minimum, minimum, maxium. Me like C. I. O. He has only one 'um—To hell with 'um."

Turkey Has Meaning for Theaters

One of the suburban dailies is soliciting a coverall ad for all the legitimate theaters to hail the Thanksgiving Day matinees. But nobody on Broadway will buy, since the masthead is illustrated with a large-ized turkey, the customary emblem of a flop show. Speaking of fiascos and turkeys, there's the tale about Charlie Washburn, the drum beater, who was in Chicago with a foregone flop-eroo. It opened two nights before Thanksgiving and drew a round of pans. So to advertise the holiday Charlie wrote an ad which said," Have your turkey diner at home. Then come down to the Loop and enjoy another at the ——Theater!" A whimsical wire outfit is producing a new wastebasket for editorial chambers. It is labeled around the rim, "Filing Cabinet for War Propaganda."

Noel Coward, who has been attached to the British Legation in Paris since the beginning of the war, is going to have his two plays—those he completed before the hostilities—produced in London, anyway, with the sanction of his superiors. Remember the Nazis' hullabaloo about "degenerate" art which was replaced through out German by the Nazi notion of "elevating" art? Well, not so long ago a great deal of that "degenerate" art was sold in Switzerland at open auction to bolster the German war chest.

Whiteman Realism

Paul Whiteman almost got knocked down by a cab outside the radio station a few nights ago. Ten minutes later he was on a Red Cross broadcast. A row among the members of the Housing Authority (federal) threatens again. This time the quarrel will be over alleged discrimination against certain would-be tenants. Televised fights are going to make one sartorial detail compulsory for all combatants. One is going to have to wear a black belt, the other white—it's the best way to tell them apart. When Ezra Stone quit See My Lawyer and went West the other day for a fling in the movies he gave up $1000 a week from his radio jobs. A new fireproof film will be placed on the market in the next few weeks. The noninflammable celluloid is said to guarantee against projection - room blazes.

Thornton Wilder's "Our Town" was written with the idea that the scenes and props would cost a producer approximately $25, if not less. And the physical production of the play could not have cost Jed Harris much more than that. But it is to be made into a picture soon and Mr. Wilder is going to be surprised to learn that his scenceless play will be budgeted at considerably more than the ordinary B-picture.

• RAISING A FAMILY

Dad Should Come First On Children's Gift List

By OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

It won't do to put the children altogether on the receiving end of Christmas. They get as much kick out of giving and planning presents, as we do.

Now, I am writing this article with one person particularly in mind. The forgotten man, Dad. I expect to receive a nice note of thanks from the men folk for saying this. But, it is their due, whether I get a rousing cheer or not.

All through the year Bob and Bernice see their Mommy spend money. They see her purse open a dozen times a day and out of it usually come their nickels and dimes. Thus the source of all good and most needs seems to be Mother. And she is, too, for it is Mommy who has to manage and on her depends much of their good and happiness.

But hers is only half the credit. She gets her house money from Dad. She works for it, but so does he. He gets up in the early hours and goes flying away to the same old grind. He can't lie down when he has a headache. He can't take time off for a party to relieve the strain.

Unless he is sold on his job and interested to the last inch, he is caught and held by chains. Besides, his responsibility works two ways. He must be good at his work. And he must work constantly, so the family will have a roof, food and clothes.

Mommy may work, at an outside job. In that case Father is still worth his while, for he breaks even on the whole and still deserves gratitude.

Maybe he is out of work. Well, he is still Daddy and he needs to have his pride bolstered however simply. A man out of a job is likely to get that awful old devil, inferiority complex.

Here comes Christmas. That's the day we give to people we love and like. Where is Dad's present? Still in the store to be hurriedly chosen from what's left at the last minute?

In some cases this is only too true. The family thinks he isn't interested much in gifts but that's just where they're wrong. He is only a tall boy, and when did boys stop wanting presents or being remembered?

Gruffness May Hide Pleasure

Maybe he won't say much when he gets his package or packages. Maybe he will huff and say, "I'd rather pick my own ties." I hope he doesn't, because the truth is that he himself is largely responsible for what love his children hold for him and words like this won't help any.

But men get embarrassed when they receive presnts, very often, and don't know what to say. They turn gruff and put their feet in their mouths trying to say the right thing.

Put Dad at the top of the list. And Daddy, in your turn, tell the children to put Mother there, too. Next come presents to each other, relatives and friends. Thy can make some of their presents. That is half the fun. The other half is doing their won buying, or at least part of it, with money they have saved or earned.
